

Jonathan Davis

Jonathan Davis is an experienced professional investor and author who has been analysing and writing about financial markets for more than 35 years. After an early career as a business journalist on The Times, The Economist and The Independent, he spent a year at MIT learning about finance and writing a thesis about Warren Buffett, qualified as a professional investor and since then has combined professional investment activity with a career as an independent author, columnist and podcaster. He has written three books about investing, is an adviser and independent member of the investment committee at Saunderson House, a non-executive director of the Jupiter UK Growth Trust and senior adviser to Orosur. He is a regular contributor to The Spectator and for 20 years wrote regular columns for The Independent and Financial Times.